Dear Council,

I lived on the Northern beaches for 20 years and worked in libraries. Whilst working in the historical services and with architectural materials, I was always saddened at the number of local houses of historic significance that were demolished. This is another in a long line of houses we should keep. If we don't renovate these buildings we will never have any history! How can you put a price on that? I am saddened that the building has been allowed to deteriorate to such an extent. This should not mean the developer gets away with demolishing the building. They are making a lot of money from the development. The least that they can do is retain this small but significant piece of history for our future generations.

Regards,
