It is important to have real organic food markets as there numerous shops selling pretend organic food. A good indication is food packed in plastic pretend biodegradable bags and thin brown paper world heritage forest paper bags from China inferring they are recycled when they are not. Thick 100% post-consumer recycled gray brown bags like ecocern bags have visible flickers on colour in the paper proving they are real recycled.

It begs the question: Is the food really organic when the packaging is pretend sustainable???
