A perfect example of 'entitled' community being completely clueless about development and good architecture. The proposal looks great and is proposed to put 74 room critical worker housing on a busy road under a 14 storey tower.

We all want our teachers, police officers, nurses and firefighters to live in local suburbs, yet the moment we see a proposal next to our houses we scream over-development and greedy developers. No-one wants to live next to school or hospital, yet it is critical, subsidised housing is no different.

The fact that this proposal was unanimously approved by the planning panel, despite all the 'outrage' by the local minority speaks volumes of how outspoken really care only about themselves and the value of their properties, without any consideration of a real community benefit.
