It's so disappointing to see another huge, modern unit block change the original streetscape of Freshwater village. Its existing charm is being extricated by property developers and the congestion in the small enclave will only get worse. Freshwaters appeal comes from it being a quiet, small, original neighborhood and these projects will eventually erode it.

I'm not against progress and I understand the need for housing; however, the original block could have been given a facelift, with some additional infrastructure like parking to help an already congested zone. What's happening is simply wasteful and greedy. We'll be left with a generic chocolate chip cookie building for the yuppies to buy up and Airbnb. What a shame.
